Healing with plants

Natural medicine involves physics, biophysics and mathematics. It includes acupuncture, natural medicine exercises and the use of colors, sound and heat in the various treatments of illnesses.

Yeh became interested in natural medicine through personal experiences about 1940. A natural medicine doctor helped relieve his mother's pain after two conventional doctors told her she was suffering from two incurable diseases and would be dead in two days.

She survived and told her son he should study natural medicine.

He went to medical school but studied conventional medicine. During his studies, however, he developed severe stomach ulcers. Doctors told him he would have to have 75 percent of his stomach removed.

Instead of surgery, Yeh opted to treat himself with herbs and his own limited knowledge of natural medicine. He no longer has stomach problems.

"Drugs can't work completely for many diseases and herbs can't work completely for many diseases," Yeh said. "Natural medicine fills in the medical gap."

He earned his general practice medical degree in China. He does not have a license to practice medicine in the United States, although he is licensed by the California Board of Medical Quality Assurance Division of Allied Health Professions to perform acupuncture and to administer herbs. His wife has a Ph.D. in Chinese natural medicine.

"In 20 years, medical science has found out some drugs can no longer be used. These herbs have been used for 5,000 years without any trouble," Mrs. Yeh said.

The Chinese use 6,000 kinds of herbs in their practice of medicine. Various combinations result in treatments for numerous illnesses but each patient requires specific attention, Yeh said.

Some of the more familiar herbs used in treatments are honeysuckle, dates, licorice, ginseng and chrysanthemum.

Although the Far East has used herbs for centuries, the practice is relatively new in the Western world.Yeh, however, said he thinks natural medicine will be practiced routinely in 50 years. "I believe it is urgent for us to bring natural medicine to America to help people out of their suffering," Yeh said.

Generally, most conventional doctors and the California Medical Association disapprove of independent holistic-humanistic health practioners who lack medical studies and experience, according to Dr. Fred Gattas, a former president of the San Bernardino County Medical Society.

Combining acupuncture with herbs can relieve migraine pain, ulcers, headaches and allergies, Yeh said.

Yeh said a combination of acupuncture and herbal treatment can solve most allergy problems after eight to 10 visits. Other ailments take longer.

"I would drive a thousand miles to see him, I really would," Ken Harstedt of Ontario said.

Harstedt said he had spurs along his spine which caused extreme pain. After seeing numerous doctors and spending about $20,000, Harstedt said, he went to Yeh. He takes acupuncture treatments every nine days but is now able to walk comfortably and to garden. Conventional doctors had told him he would be confined to a wheelchair.

Harstedt said he doesn't have any ill will toward regular doctors but they simply couldn't help him. Yeh did.

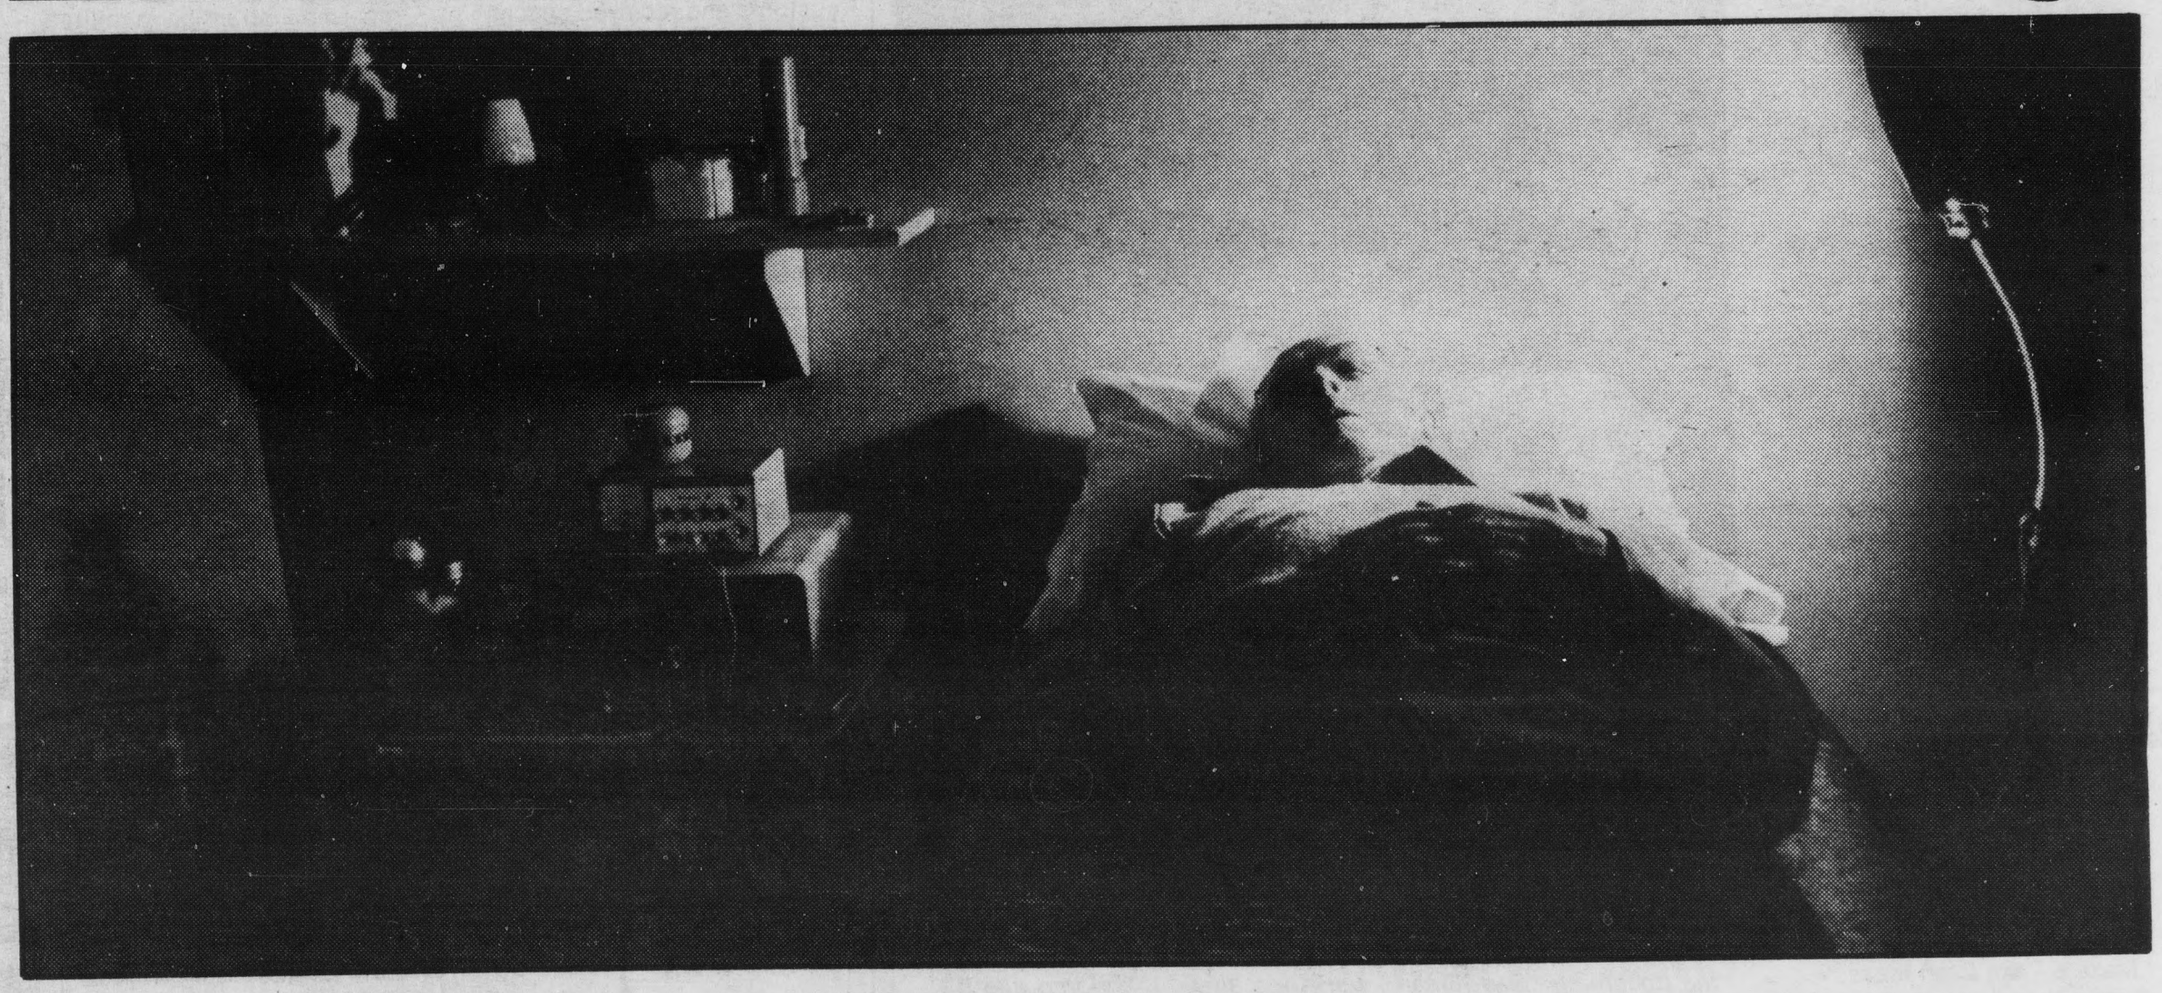

The Yehs also teach patients natural medicine exercises including breathing techniques, yoga and tai chi, a Chinese form of shadow boxing, a self defense form that can also be used as an exercise.

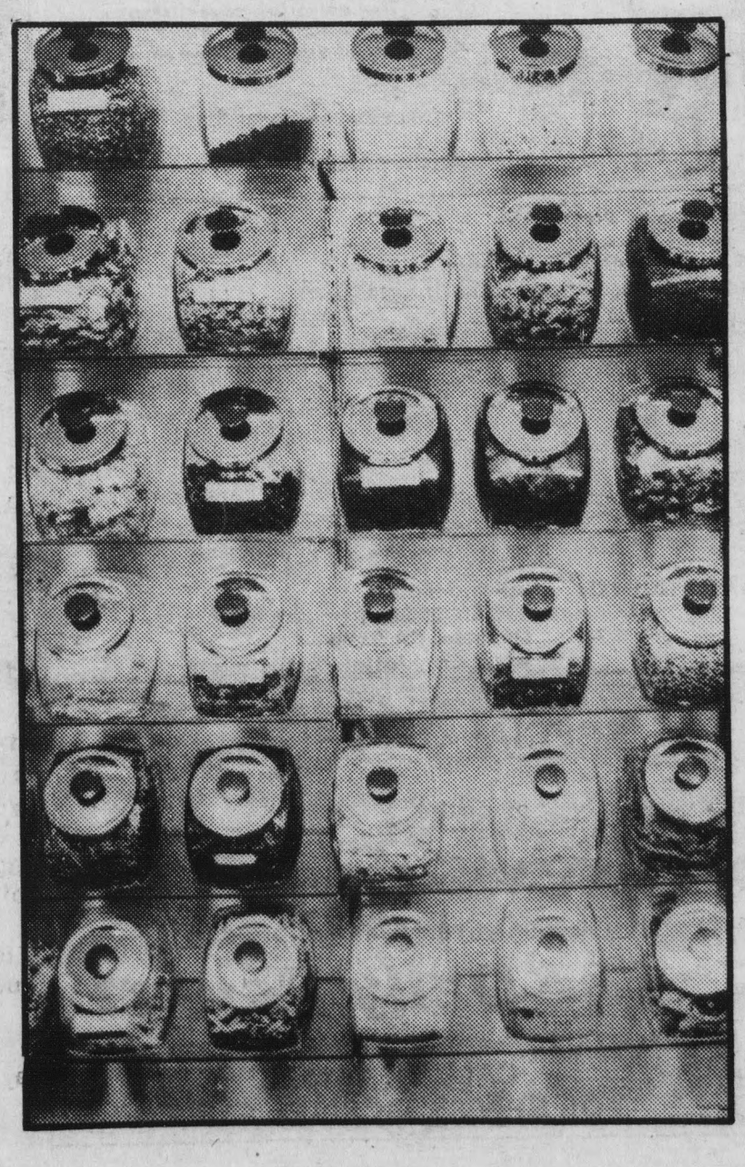

Colors and sounds also play an important role in the healing process. Each of the Yehs' examination rooms is painted a different color - yellow for weight-related problems; blue for blood pressure problems; purple for hormone or sexual problems; and pink for beauty-related problems.

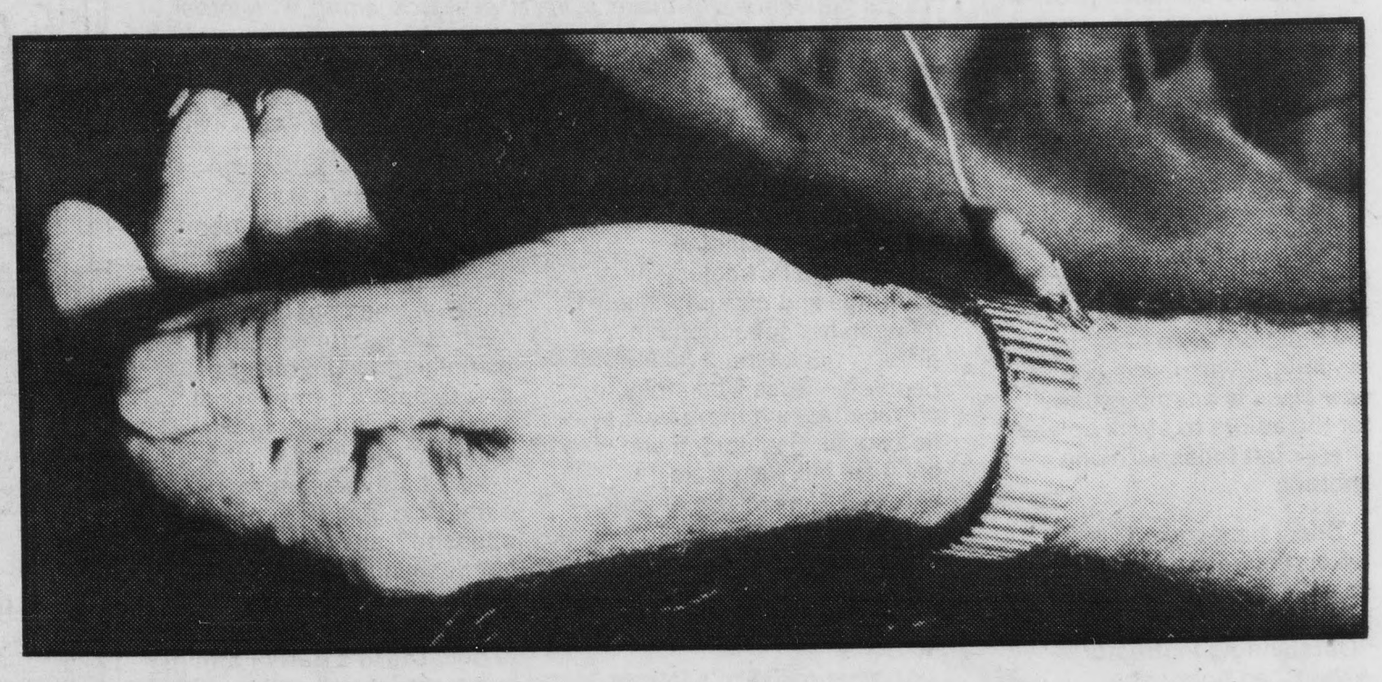

Although the Chinese have been using herbs to treat maladies for thousands of years, Yeh is combining ancient teachings with modern technology. He is entering all the information he has about herbs and their treatment onto a computer program.

Yeh said he thinks computers one day routinely will be asked to diagnose problems and prescribe treatments. □

Her ideas add spice to program

By Terry Tirella

Offering her cooking, arts and craft workshop for children is almost as much fun for instructor Barbara Drake as it is for the 8- to 12-year-old students.

Drake again will be teaching Upland Recreation Department's "Sweethearts" class on Saturday, Feb. 9, 9 a.m. to 1 p.m., and "Bunny Luv" on March 30 at the same time. "Basically, I'm a kid at heart," Drake said. Her workshops are as much play for her as for her students.

"The kids (in the Saturday workshops) are neat and I have a lot of supportive parents, many who have been bringing their kids since the beginning," she said. Drake tries not to repeat many of her craft ideas and is constantly in search of new ones.

"I love working for Upland recreation," Drake said. "Whenever I have a crazy idea for a class, they say try it." One of Drake's new classes this year is aimed at teachers, Scout and recreation leaders.

The new class, called "Make & Take Craft Ideas," gives adults a chance to stock up on craft ideas and patterns to teach to children in conjunction with the spring holidays, St. Patrick's Day, Easter, Mother's Day, Father's Day and other spring surprises.

"These mothers, Scout leaders and den mothers always have to have a craft for the children to do at each meeting," Drake said. Her new class is an opportunity for the adults to stock up and share craft ideas with one another.

Drake has worked for Upland recreation for seven years. She was the first recipient of the department's "Outstanding Instructor Award," an honor she cherishes.

But teaching for Upland Recreation isn't her only occupation. "I have a lot of little jobs," Drake said, including working for Ontario-Montclair School District's Indian Education program.

She is a part of the San Gabriel Mission Indian tribe. "I was never really interested (in her Indian heritage) until I became an adult," she said.

Upland instructor Barbara Drake shows one of the crafts from the upcoming "Sweetheart" workshop aimed a children age 9 to 12. Students will make a heart necklace along with other Valentine arts and crafts.

Drake definitely made up for lost time. Her home is a hodge podge of Indian artifacts, dolls, implements, paintings and basketry. Many items in her collection are gifts. "I think I must haunt people because when they're on vacation and they say they find something unique and get it for me," she said. "I happen to know a lot of very nice people."

Another of Drake's jobs is working as a librarian in an environmental school in Devore, a school that focuses on nature and the environment as well as other academic fields.

Nature is one of Drake's favorite hobbies she shares with her husband, Gary. They have a menagerie of pets: chickens, fish, a pheasant named Frazier, a black crow that is rehabilitating, a couple varieties of quail, a couple varieties of rabbits, three tortoises and a cat.

They also have a garden filled with fruit trees, berries and grapes and vegetables, however, the couple has not been successful with their pumpkin-growing efforts. "I'd love to have a pumpkin patch for the kids, but we've been failures," she said.

"We both like nature, but other than that were very opposite," she said. She and her husband have two children and a grandson.

Drake said she loves visits to her "Drake's Berry Farm" by neighborhood children. "I have thought what I'd like to do is have a little nature camp and let kids plant seeds and watch them grow ... teach them the right way to handle and care for their animals so they (the children) don't mistreat them."

Anyone interested in enrolling in any of Drake's classes may call Upland Recreation at 985-0994 or stop by the recreation office at 433 N. Second St.

Boy Scouts helping out Upland's runners

By Terri Tirella

Upland residents are benefiting from community service work done by local Eagle Scout candidates, said Larry Thornburg, director of recreation for the city.

Walkers and joggers now have an added attraction along the Euclid Avenue median strip north of Foothill Boulevard — mile marker signs.

"Two years ago I was thinking about something to do (to complete Eagle status)," said Scott Ungles, a 14-year-old Rancho Cucamonga resident. "We (his troop) took a walk up that way to complete requirements for another badge and I wondered why there wasn't any markers. Then I decided it wasn't such a good idea but I ended up coming back to it."

The project was planned and coordinated by Ungles, who designed the redwood markers. "I purchased the two eight-foot posts and cut them down to four feet each and shaped the top. Bill Eaton did the number engraving," Ungles said.

Thornburg said while it takes time to find and coordinate the community service projects Eagle Scout candidates must have to complete their requirements, it does save the city several man hours.

Some of the services candidates have performed include painting park benches and play equipment, making identifying signs for parks and doing rock landscaping at park sites.

"As far as I'm concerned, it's a worthwhile service and a nice benefit for the community," Thornburg said of the candidate's work.

Restaurant class offers job training

The Baldy View ROP Restaurant Services class now has a new tuition-free job training course called Food Specialties, at Stone Mountain Foods, 290 N. Benson No. 9, Upland.

The class features experience in a hands-on kitchen classroom at that location for nine weeks. The students will participate in creative food skills such as preparation for off-premises catering, setting up attractive buffets, various dessert and cake preparations, confection making, and techniques for handling and cooking meats.

After completing the kitchen classroom portion, students will be placed in commercial restaurants in the community for further training. Classes are held Monday through Friday, 2:30 to 5:30 p.m.

Search for machine ends successfully

X-ray device to be refurbished then sent to Peruvians living in a remote jungle area

Sometime next year a used X-ray machine — soon to be refurbished at REAP (Radiological Equipment Assistance Program) International — will be shipped to the New Horizon Mission in Peru where Dr. Garman has worked without sophisticated equipment for the past 20 years.

The Nazarene missionary, now home in Whittier on a year's furlough, will return to the Peruvian jungle next August.

Working to save lives near the headwaters of the Amazon River, Dr. Garman said the X-ray unit will be used for treatment of fractures, as a diagnostic tool, and for preventive medicine.

The nearest unit is currently five or six hours from his isolated clinic. Those with gastrointestinal problems must travel for two days for an X-ray, the doctor related. "Ninety-eight percent of the people have never had one," he added.

Dr. Garman may "take pictures of spines of the older folks." This may be useful in determining if Peruvians are especially prone to bone disease or if they lack calcium.

Without a doubt, Dr. Garman said it will be "just like Christmas" when the machine arrives at his remote mission station.

Members of the Pomona Kiwanis Club launched a fund-raising drive to purchase the X-ray unit after hearing Dr. Garman's narrative about "a unique form of X-ray" used by Peruvian Indians.

The Indians, Dr. Garman related, pass a guinea pig over a person's entire body. Then they cut the pig open and search for a defect. If a defect is found in the animal, it is presumed the same defect exists in the patient.

Some Indians have absolute faith in the procedure. In one case, it was determined a woman had a heart defect after the unusual diagnostic procedure was used, Dr. Garman reported.

Dr. Garman, Don Williams, Kiwanis Club president, and Doug Bridges, Kiwanis vice president, recently visited the warehouse to select the X-ray unit with an access package — complete with all necessary darkroom equipment.

The wonder of it all, said Bridges, is that the club discovered the existence of REAP, an organization formed by Jim and Gladys Sharp in 1973 to provide refurbished medical equipment to mission hospitals and clinics in the developing world.

Club members questioned how they could raise the needed funds and find the expertise to buy the equipment. Then they learned REAP refurbishes donated equipment and sells it for refurbishment costs.

A tour of the facility, Bridges noted, revealed that equipment is in "like-new condition" after being restored by Bill Kennedy and his staff.

The machine selected by Dr. Garman will cost $5,000 as compared to $36,000 for a new one of the same type. Kiwanis members raised $1,600 during a Christmas candy sale. With still more funds needed, the club will apply for a Kiwanis International grant and ask other clubs to join the effort, Bridges said.

Sharp, a radiological consultant, formed REAP after hearing "horror stories" about poorly-equipped missions throughout the world.

Through investigation, Sharp learned some equipment is "unusable" when it arrives at a mission and other machines break down after arrival in remote areas without spare parts or repairmen "so that 75 percent never sees operation."

In addition, some equipment is not designed for use in isolated places, he added.

Sharp said he was inspired to organize REAP after inspecting X-ray units ready for shipment to a South American country by a charitable organization. One was potentially dangerous and illegal in California. Vital parts were missing from two others.

Sharp took usable parts from the two units and turned them into one functioning unit. He then closed his office in Claremont and moved into a small warehouse in La Verne to engage in full-time restoration of used equipment "to help the helping hands heal."

The operation has expanded and is now located at 972 W. Ninth St., Upland.

Calvin Williams, REAP executive director, said the organization — in addition to restoring donated equipment — sends technicians into mission fields to assist with their use.

The organization provides advice and counseling to mission personnel by mail and over short-wave radio, Williams noted.

REAP is also involved in research and development and has perfected an X-ray unit that runs off battery current and can be used in isolated areas.

But, said Williams, REAP needs more donations from doctors and hospitals to keep the supply of equipment flowing.

MOD-FAD-CLASSIC

Are you tired of paying good money for clothing that seems to go out of style quickly? Tired of trying to keep up with the fashion game? With an understanding of the three influences of fashion and a feel for your own best line, style and fabrics, you can select pieces that will continue to be successful for you year after year.

Three types of styles are always at work in the garment industry. FAD -clothing which is "in" for six months or so, like the neon looks today is one quick incluence. MOD -popular styles which last from one to three years like the Lady Di sleeve, is the second factor at work. The final influence is the CLASSIC, with the forever look of the grey flannel suit.

You should select most of your wardrobe in the fashion, classic look. Add some mod for fun, but don't invest highly in the fads. Daybrights and Starshines will probably include more mod in their wardrobes, while High Noons and Dawns will remain with the classics they feel most comfortable in. Sunsets should pay attention to texture in maintaining their classic look. Moonrays will always enjoy a balance of drama and simplicity, and Bright Mornings will choose pieces with crisper, sportier lines.

More specific tips on line are included in our color seminar package. Class times for this week are Tues AM Wed PM.

Kids learn lesson: Studying does indeed pay off when it comes to spelling bees

Hours of study and spelling practice paid off last week for a group of Pioneer Junior High School students in Upland.

After a series of school spelling competitions, the three top winners were selected to travel to the annual San Bernardino County Spelling Connection.

The top three Pioneer winners were Chanda Pierce, Preston Kaenel and Lisa Esparcia. Participants in the annual program do not compete. Instead, they take part in various games and exhibits involving verbal and writing skills in a fair atmosphere.

"The program is just wonderful because the students work so hard to succeed," Valerie Thompson, Pioneer teacher said.

Ms. Thompson and Sherry Hibbard conducted the school preliminary competition.

All students competed in a written spelling bee in their English classes. Students next participated in a second round of written competition.

The top 10 students in grades seven and eight then competed in an oral spelling bee.

Joy comes in twos for R.C. couple

If the newborn twins of Pamela and Bob Gilpatrick of Rancho Cucamonga find their parents to be more understanding than other parents of twins, they might just chalk it up to experience.

Mrs. Gilpatrick is a fraternal twin and Mr. Gilpatrick has twin sisters.

"There's unquestionably a genetic tendency toward twinning," said Dr. David Comings, director of the department of medical genetics at the City of Hope Medical Center in Duarte. "We don't know exactly how to explain it," he added.

Comings said there is a recessive gene for fraternal twins, which means both parents would need to have the gene in order to have twins. Identical twins are generally not the result of genetic cause, he added, though there are a few cases reported.

It is a common fallacy that this gene skips every other generation, Comings said. People may have come to that conclusion from observing the recessive gene becoming dominant after skipping a generation, he added.

If you are a female twin, your chance of giving birth to twins is 2½ times greater. The rate for male twins is not significantly greater than that found in the general population, he added.

U.S. Caucasions give birth to twins in 6.7 births out of every 1,000, according to Comings. He said blacks have a higher rate of twin births, with Californian blacks giving birth to twins 11 out of every 1,000 births.

Female twins give birth to twins in 17 out of every 1,000 births, he said.

"Let me tell you, it was a shock," said Mrs. Gilpatrick, remembering when she learned in October that she was having twins. "We weren't expecting it. It was neat."

She was so excited, she said, that "my mom thought I was going to have a nervous breakdown. She kept telling me to settle down."

Mrs. Gilpatrick gave birth to twins Ricky and Kristie three weeks prematurely on January 6 at Loma Linda Hospital. The twins were not released from the hospital until January 18 because they weren't eating well.

"I'm glad they're home," Mrs. Gilpatrick said. She still worries about their eating habits though, she said. "They're fine, it's just me that's paranoid," she said.

The twins are on a three-hour feeding schedule and it often takes them 1½ hours to feed. "It's a lot of work," Mrs. Gilpatrick said.

"It's a tremendous amount of work," she added. "But I wouldn't trade it for just one (child)." □

PHOTO TIPS

By Holt Confer
Copley News Service

Last week, I started telling you about some of the products and services I came across at Photo '84, the large photography extravaganza sponsored by Photo District News.

Well, I got back home with several pounds of literature, most of which I saved to sort through with you as I was writing these last two columns. While there will be things that might not interest you, there just might be something in my blue and white Minolta shopping bag you'll find very helpful to your photographic efforts. So with that brief, almost uninspiring introduction, let's dive into the pile.

I made arrangements to try some of the Ilford films — a product that's not always easy to find in the local camera stores. The company has an excellent reputation and has been producing light-sensitive products for a long, long time. But old purchasing habits are difficult to break, and often a strange product on the shelf just sits there until it goes out of date. Then the retailer gets discouraged, refuses to carry the "slow movers" and a product that some or all of us might find useful disappears.

In the same vein, I picked up a roll of Konica color print film to try. Konica, too, has a reputation for manufacturing photo films — much of it, until recently, privately labeled. But now they are featuring their own name on dark blue boxes. Try a roll or two, and compare the results to what's currently in your camera. You might be pleasantly surprised or dreadfully disappointed, but that's the way we expand our horizons.

If anyone needs technical data on Schneider enlarging and camera lenses, the company is located at 400 Crossways Park Drive, Woodbury, N.Y. 11797. Incidentally, Schneider makes 4x, 6x and 8x lupes (a lupe is a type of magnifier most pros use for checking transparency or print quality) that can be individually focused — a fine piece of equipment that's a "must" for any serious photographer.

The Soligor division of AIC Photo, Inc. (Carle Place, New York, N.Y. 11514) had quite a display at the show. There were lots of new lenses I hadn't seen as well as the company's new line of strobe lighting equipment. For years, I've used a Soligor CD 35-105 lens — and I would have to estimate nearly 75 percent of all my photos get taken with that lens. Just glancing through their recent catalog, I don't see the lens listed any longer. That's a shame. I've really grown attached to that heavy hunk of glass — too bad it's not available.

If you're at the point in your picture taking that background has become important, chances are a place like the Set Shop, 3 W. 20th St, New York N.Y. 10011, will be important. Among other background props, the Set Shop carries a complete stock of background papers. Sizes range from 107 inches by 36 feet; 107 inches by 150 feet; and 140 inches by 100 feet. They have a nifty little swatch book, showing all the available colors along with their identification numbers. I'll just bet they have colors you can't get in your hometown and they'd probably be delighted to send one of those swatch books to you if you'd drop them a note on your letterhead.

If you care to get a bit more fancy with your backdrops, then the name you'll want is Charles Broderson, Inc. 873 Broadway, New York, N.Y. 10003. This company features many special designs that have been commissioned for major art shows and fashion shows. And, their literature says, a full-color catalog will be available soon.

In the "I wish I'd thought of that" category, a company called Perfected Photo Products (8420 Sylvia Ave., Northridge, Calif. 91324) offers something they call a Tripod Quick-Clamp. The Quick-Clamp gets mounted on your tripod, while an adaptor plate gets attached on your camera — the arrangement allows instant attaching and detaching of camera (or telephoto lenses) from your tripod — without fiddling with the tripod screw. If you happen to be one of those folks who cringe at the thought of changing cameras or lenses once they're secured to a tripod, then this gadget is for you.

1984: The year of Cabernet Sauvignon

By Dan Berger
Copley News Service

In 1983 it was champagne, in 1984 it's Cabernet Sauvignon.

That's the conclusion I draw from interviews with wine makers and nursery owners in Northern California's wine country. The California wine industry appears to be turning, slowly, from white wine back toward red.

Oh, the swing won't be noticed for at least three years, but predictions by many knowledgeable people in the industry are that red wine, especially Cabernet Sauvignon, will be in greater demand in the coming few years, and the share of the market that white wine now commands will decrease.

Part of the decrease in white wine sales will come because of the greater demand for sparkling wine. That is because, in statistical terms, sparkling wine and white wine are treated as separate categories.

In 1974, about a half-dozen premium sparkling wineries existed. Today, at least 30 wineries are making premium sparkling wine, and the demand for it is increasing — and not just at New Year's time and in June for weddings and graduations.

Today, sparkling wine is the beverage of choice to serve before a fine meal, or as a substitute for a martini. Sales of white distilled spirits (gin, vodka) have declined.

Last year, plantings of Pinot Noir grapes exceeded all other red varieties combined — and it is the Pinot Noir that gives sparkling wine its backbone. Most of the plantings of Pinot Noir are for sparkling wine. And now nurserymen say that plantings of Cabernet are on the rise for the first time in almost a decade.

The increasing interest in Cabernet is more subtle than the champagne explosion. It started, interestingly enough, with the wine recession of 1982 and early 1983.

Sales of all wine were down, and retailers were nervous about buying large quantities of any wines. Lower prices, once the cure-all of almost any industry, seemed to offer only moderate hope.

Yet there was a ray of hope: the strong U.S. dollar. It meant lower prices for French wines, and this encouraged some neophyte collectors of wine to buy the premium wines of France, especially the well-priced Bordeaux.

Recently, I saw a bottle of 1981 Chateau Mouton-Rothschild selling for $26.95. The 1981 vintage in France was excellent, and Mouton is a fine-quality wine. To find it selling for the same price or less than the superb 1978 sold for in 1981 is considered by some to be a bargain.

California Cabernets rise in popularity

shops has meant more and more discounted wines, in all price ranges. Good-quality French red Bordeaux can be found from $4 and up.

And as French wines drew much of the wine collectors' dollars, oodles of good California wines were left behind. As stocks built up on store shelves and in warehouses, prices began to drop. Today drinkable Cabernets from California can be found at $4 to $6, and fine-quality Cabernets at $7 to $11 a bottle — just about the same prices they were two years ago.

The wine recession was a painful lesson for the California wine industry — that the public simply won't stand for prices that are high in comparison with the French wines. A buyer reasons: "If I can buy a good-quality Bordeaux for $9 and a good-quality Cabernet for $9, I'll buy the Bordeaux because it's imported." The argument may not sound valid, but it's what a lot of buyers do.

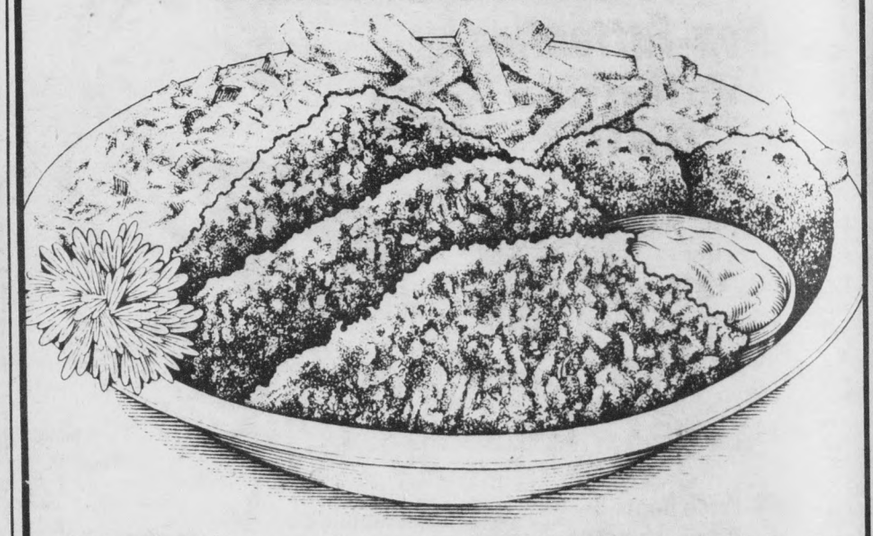

Realizing the problem, Californians have lowered or stabilized prices, and California Cabernet sales are up, statistics show.

It is clear that Cabernet is being viewed as a good value, and the industry has high hopes of a resurgence in this grape in the coming three years.

Gazing the heavens

A thick cloud of interstellar gas slowly falls from the black of outer space. Countless planets cling to its spinning arms as it grows larger and larger. Soon the descending mass envelops and illuminates the horizon.

"This is neat!," raves an energetic voice, cutting through the silence and illusion. "It's simple too."

Something clicks, and suddenly the galaxy that had filled the sky, is back to where it started — a tiny circle in the deep of space.

The lights come on.

Professor Bob Lober holds a hollow tin in his hands. "You see, that's all it is. A piece of film on a three-pound coffee can."

Lober had created the image by placing the makeshift drum, etched with the Milky Way galaxy, on a projector with a moving bulb that makes the cloud seem to grow.

His fresh enthusiasm for his homemade gadget is curious in that he has been creating the falling apparition on the ceiling of the Chaffey College Planetarium for years.

Lober, a professor of astronomy, is the caretaker and proprieter of the planetarium. "It's my home away from home, and I treat it like my home," he says.

Story by Philip Boas Photos by Tom Tondee

The building's blue carpet and blue theater chairs scarcely show wear. "Look at this," says Lober with a beholding wave of his hand. "This rug and furniture are the original — after 17 years. Does that tell you something?"

He decries any errant feet that come to rest on chair arms or seats. Also, no students dare bring drinks into his sanctuary.

In 1968, the same year he began teaching at Chaffey, the planetarium was funded and built. By mere fortune he had walked into a job that, he will tell you, resembles the chores of diety.

As a young teacher at the Alta Loma junior college, he was unfolding the skies and unfurling the heavens.

"You do feel like God in this job," Lober says with conviction. "But then a fuse will go out and bring you out of it."

Sitting behind control panels with 10 miles of wire linked to 190 switches, he sets in motion the planetariat — a large, gyrating projector that casts the stars upon a domed ceiling.

It is a precision instrument, finely cut with 1,650 holes that, with light, give shape to the stars and planets. "This is absolutely a gem," says Lober. "It hasn't had a breakdown in six years."

The planetariat sits in the middle of the planetarium and resembles a giant rattle. With it, Lober toys with the likes of Neptune and Uranus, Jupiter and Saturn, pulling them out of the text books and sweeping them across his sky.

Enrollment records speak highly of Lober's enthusiam and methods. While teaching at a college where the student body has steadily shrunk in recent years, Lober continues to pack his classes, often teaching 70 to 80 students at a time. "I've been here 17 years and I've never been without a full class," he says.

"This is what I like to do," says Lober, discussing the astronomy and math classes he teaches. There is none of the "publish or perish" pressures on faculty at junior colleges and he says he likes it that way. "People that are here are here because they want to teach."

Aside from generating revenue for the school by attracting students to his classes, Lober figures he has saved the school a lot of money in maintainence.

In 1968 the planetarium cost Chaffey College $50,000, the planetariut $29,000 and the dome $5,000. Today the entire package would run about $750,000, says Lober. He has carefully tended the building and its devices so they look and run as if purchased last year.

There was a time when the plantarium was open to the public. About 17,000 people a year visited the college and watched Lober's cosmic presentations. Many were elementary school children who would later sign up in Lober's classes and tell him of the time they visited his world years before.

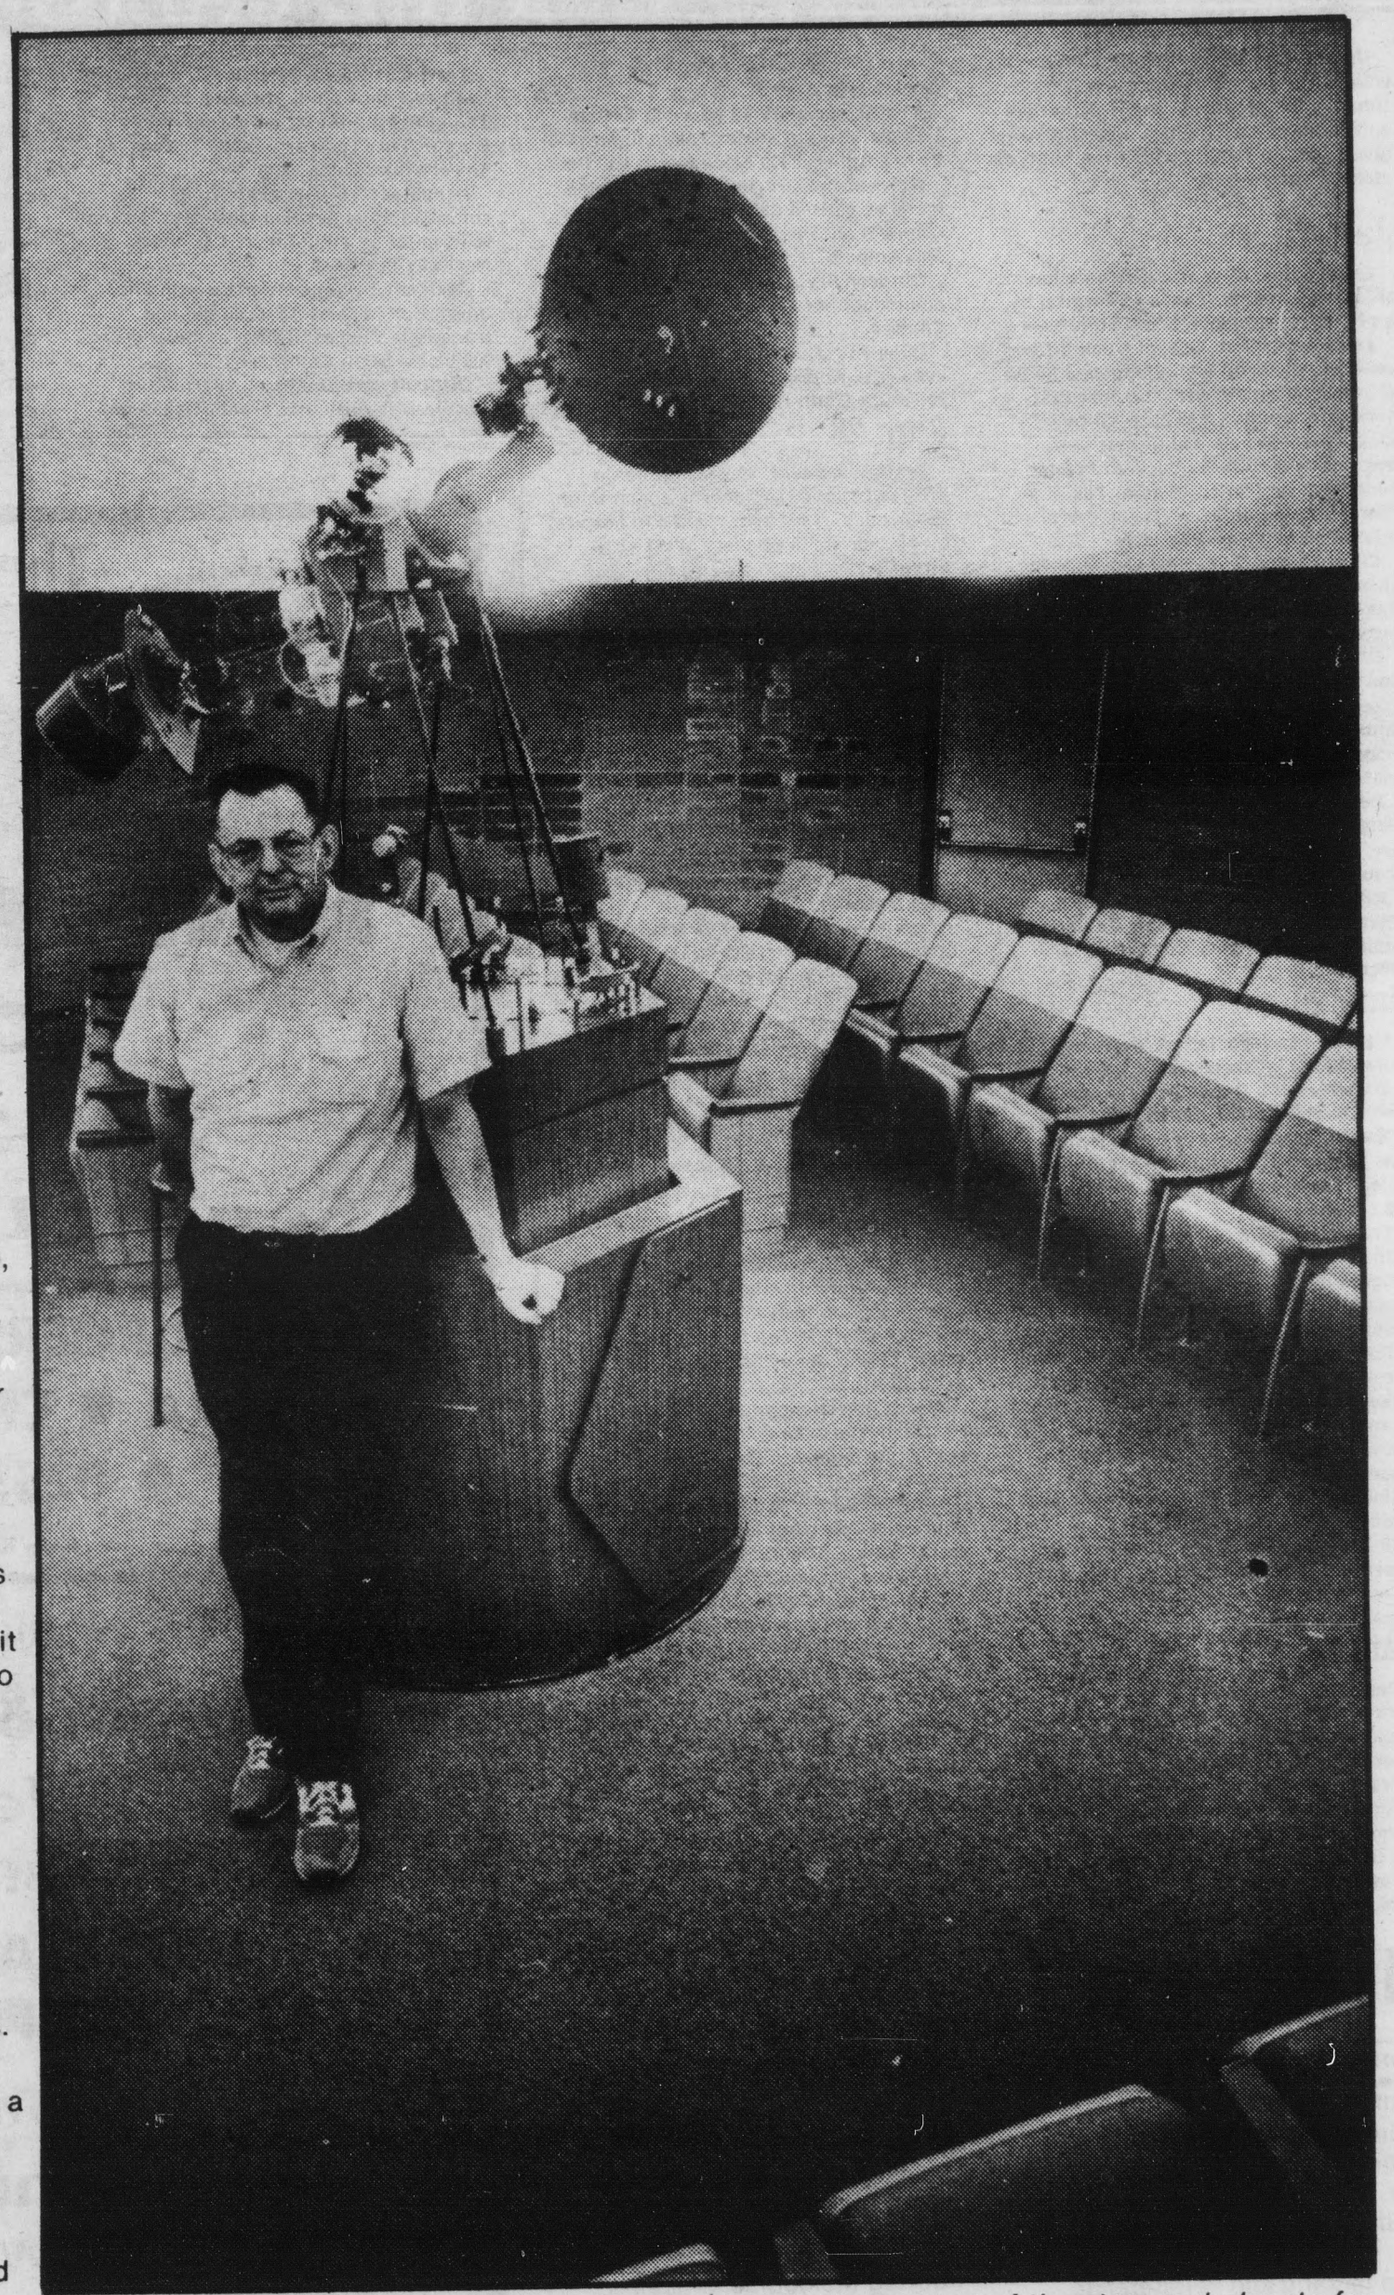

"I get a kick out of getting kids in here who I had in elementary school tours," he says. "This is where this thing (the planetarium) is so important."

With the passage of proposition 13 four years ago, junior colleges saw a drastic cut in public funds. Chaffey could no longer afford to produce additional shows for the public and closed its planetarium to visitors.

Lober said he was dejected. His working day was cut in half. He continues to use the planetarium to teach students, but he feels it is a waste of resources not to use the building more often. "This is the best community service device the college has," he said.

While Lober goes to all lengths to guard the hundreds of thousands of dollars of equipment he is responsible for, a greater priority emerges in his ways.

In a corridor of the planetarium, Lober picks up a dusty student project made of popsicle sticks. With the device he demonstrates the "Doppler effect," with the sticks representing high and low frequency sound waves. "This is marvelous," he says fondly. Later, he returns the project gently to its shelf, with the rest of his student collections. □

The Chaffey College Planetarium once demonstrated the movement of the stars and planets for thousands of school children, but today it is closed to the public for lack of funds to produce astronomy shows. The planetariat (left), *an expensive and finely crafted projector, has 1,650 holes that transforms bulb light to stars and planets on the domed ceiling of the planetarium. Feb 17-23 is engineers' week

Upland City Council members have joined their Ontario counterparts in proclaiming Feb. 17-23 National Engineers' Week.

The National Society of Professional Engineers celebrates the week each year near George Washington's birthday. Washington was a noted military engineer and land surveyor.

"The week is declared in recognition of engineering technology as a vital element in providing health, safety and economical growth for the citizens of the Inland Empire, the state of California and the nation," Tim Mim Mack, Upland consulting engineer, said.

Local engineers will have an exhibit at the Riverside Plaza Shopping Center in Riverside and a dinner Feb. 21 at the National Orange Show restaurant. The guest will be Mary Cleave, NASA astronaut, according to Mim Mack.

Writers club to install officers

Patricia Ann Almazan of Upland has been elected president of the Pomona Valley Writer's Club (PVWC) for the 1985 term and will be installed Saturday at a potluck to be held at her home.

The potluck buffet, scheduled for 7:30 p.m., is open to all area writers, published and unpublished.

Band festival scheduled for tonight

Talented student musicians from 20 San Bernardino County School Districts will perform tonight in the Annual Honor Bands Festival at Alta Loma High School.

The honor bands festival has been a tradition in county public high schools for the past 25 years.

Each year the San Bernardino County Schools office and the San Bernardino Music Educators Association sponsor the festival. More than 350 students will participate tonight.

Three bands play at the festival. The elementary band is made up of 150 students recommended by their instructors. Junior and senior bands have about 100 members each who were selected through audition.

According to Hope McKay, curriculum coordinator with San Bernardino County Schools, each guest conductor chooses music for his respective band. Different conductors are selected to participate each year.

Joe Afferbaugh, music director for the Fontana Unified School District, will serve as guest conductor for the elementary band. Guest conductor for the junior high band will be Richard Marino, retired band director for Anaheim High School, and senior conductor will be Robert Wojciak, director of bands at the University of Southern California.

"For many students, particularly the younger ones, ths festival represents their first chance to perform with a group. The goal of the program is to provide students a learning opportunity, both in terms of meeting fellow musicians and in gaining valuable information from the guest conductors," McKay said.

Mrs. Plano said, "Dues for the 1985 year remain the same as many years previously ... $10 for a regular membership and $5 for an associate membership. In November, the local club was given an award for being outstanding by bringing 91 new members into the organization during 1984.," she said.

Three awards will be presented at the champagne brunch: one to the club member bringing in the most new members, one to the member bringing in the second most new members and a drawing among those renewing memberships by Jan. 31.

Membership committee members coordinating this special event are: the Mmes. Walter Stewart, chairman; and Sidney Wechsler, Vernon Leuthold, Robert Rihs and Paul Sanger. For more information or to make reservations, call Mrs. Leuthold at 983-3474.

COINS

By Gary L. Palmer
Copley News Service

You've no doubt seen coins of Asia and the Far East before, but could you tell what country they came from? Or what year they were minted?

Probably not, unless you happen to be a numismatic scholar specializing in that particular area of the hobby.

You've probably just tossed such coins into a "junk" box with other more readily discernible foreign coins.

But now, thanks to author Albert Galloway and Krause Publications of Iola, Wis., even the novice can seem like an expert in easily identifying Eastern coins. "Illustrated Coin Dating Guide for the Eastern World" is an important book collectors will want to add to their numismatic library.

With detailed charts and annotated illustrations, the coin-dating guide also gives collectors the means to match unknown coins with their country of origin.

The publishers say the 136-page book is breaking new ground for collectors since it's the first research aid dealing solely with the subject of coin dating. Instructions throughout the softcover publication are presented in an easy-to-understand format with each step fully explained.

The guide gives conversion information for major Eastern systems and eras, including Chinese, Tibetan, Muhammadan, Buddhist, Chula Sakarat, Ethiopian, Jewish, Korean, Bangkok, Saka and Vikrama Samvat.

Thanks to charts and more than 230 illustrations, collectors will identify a coin within a system/era, convert its date into Western numerals and finally translate that date into its Western (A.D.) equivalent.

"The Illustrated Coin Dating Guide for the Eastern World" is priced at $9.95 and will prove a valuable tool for any hobbyist who realizes the study of coins is the single most important aspect of numismatics.

Ever wonder how coins fare as an investment? Which would you rather own, coins or NYSE stocks? Coins or Treasury bonds? Coins or diamonds? Coins or old masters' paintings?

You might be surprised to know that a $10,000 portfolio of rare coins appreciated far more in the last year than any other commodity, according to FACT magazine.

A $10,000 investment in rare coins a year ago would have grown to $15,996 today while a similar investment in over-the-counter stocks — the second-best choice you could have made — would be valued at $12,912.

Ironically, the worst investments you could have made in the last year (from a list of 21) would have been gold and silver, which certainly play a significant role in numismatics.

The $10,000 investment in these precious metals would have shrunk to $9,170 for gold and $9,133 for silver.

Even more impressive is the performance of a $10,000 coin portfolio over the last five years. Bought in 1980, it today would have a value of $49,349. A similar investment in OTC stocks would be worth $24,707 today, according to the magazine.

Platinum ranked as the seventh-best investment in the last year, returning $1,249 on $10,000 spent, but over the last five years it ranked as the next-to-worst choice, losing $175 over that span. Only diamonds were worse — dropping to a net worth of only $7,750 today. Hardly a gem of an investment.

Talk set on drug reactions

Dr. Robert Boucek will speak on cross reactions of drugs on older patients when he addresses a meeting of the Parkinson Education Group.

The meeting will be held from 10 a.m. to noon Feb. 14 at the Education Center, Casa Colina Hospital of Rehabilitative Medicine, 255 E. Bonita Ave., Pomona.

Boucek was on the medical staff of the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn., and director of research at the Miami Heart Institute. Currently, he is professor of medicine and director of cardiovascular research at Loma Linda University Medical Center and Jerry L. Pettis Veterans' Administration Hospital, both in Loma Linda.

The meeting is open to the public. For more information, call 593-9462.

Reaching goals topic of meeting

The social hour will begin at 10:45 a.m., followed by lunch at 11:30. Call Peggy Linberg at 981-0452 by Sunday to make reservations.

Anyone who has lived in Upland two years or less is invited to join the group and may call Judith Schoen at 981-5972 for more information.

PETS

By R.G. Elmore, D.V.M.
Copley News Service

Q. Our children are badgering us to buy them a pair of guinea pigs.

How long do guinea pigs live? How often do they reproduce? How large are their litters?

Help! We do not want to be overrun with guinea pigs!

A. Guinea pigs, very affectionate little rodents, are neither from Guinea nor are they pigs.

Guinea pigs originated in South America. It has been reported that South American Indians kept domestic guinea pigs long before the discovery of America. Guinea pig mummies and skeletons have been discovered during archaeological expeditions of ancient Inca settlements.

Apparently Spanish explorers took guinea pigs to Europe in the 1500s. Dutch merchants purchased guinea pigs in Dutch Guiana and took them home to their children around 1700. Dutch guinea pigs soon were being sold in France and England.

The Dutch called the furry little animals "sea pigs." The rodent came from across the sea, squealed like a pig, and had a chubby little body like a pig.

No one knows for sure why the little rodents are called "guinea pigs." One of the more interesting explanations is related to the English coin known as a guinea. The first imported guinea pigs cost approximately one guinea. Therefore, a guinea pig meant "the little pig costing one guinea."

Guinea pigs reach approximately 8 to 14 inches in length. Adult females usually weigh between 1 and 2 pounds. Adult males usually weigh from 2 to 4 pounds.

Female guinea pigs often reach puberty as early as 5 to 8 weeks of age. Males are able to mate as early as 9 to 10 weeks of age. Guinea pigs come into season throughout the year at intervals of approximately 16 to 17 days.

Pregnancy lasts for about 9 to 10 weeks. The average litter contains 2 to 4 guinea pigs.

Generally, it is permissible for the male to be present during the birth. The male guinea pig usually displays no particular interest in the birth. It must be remembered, however, that the female usually goes into season a few hours following birth of a litter. If you do not wish to have more guinea pigs, you should remove the male from the female a few days before the expected birth.

Usually the birthing process takes only 10 to 30 minutes. Guinea pigs are born with their eyes open. The newborn are able to walk and eat solid foods almost immediately following birth. The female guinea pig has only two mammary glands, which are located well back on her belly. Therefcre only two babies can nurse at any one time. The baby guinea pigs usually are weaned totally at about three weeks of age.

Guinea pigs multiply very rapidly, naturally. The best way to avoid being overrun with guinea pigs is to purchase only females.

If orange is your color, this gazania is the flower

By Patrick Denton
Copley News Service

The All-America award-winning flowers for 1985 offer quite a diversity in beautiful new annuals for home gardens this coming summer.

The one that surprised and delighted our family the most was the award-winning gazania called Mini-Star Tangerine. Orange is just about our favorite color in flowers, and Mini-Star Tangerine produced massive quantities of single, daisylike flowers in a cheery, luminous orange.

I planted the seeds toward the end of March last year. Transplanted in late May, the plants began blooming in July with a burst of wonderfully bright tangerine color. They stayed nicely compact, their short stems growing to about 8 inches high above rosettes of long leaves that gave the plants about a 12-inch spread. The flowers were about 2½ inches across.

This gazania also was a real showpiece in hanging baskets, and just seems to be an all-around winner. It has been given a Fleuroselect award, as well — that's the European counterpart to our North American All-America Selections.

Another award-winning flower for 1985 that proved to be a clearly superior, easy-growing beauty in our garden and patio pots last summer was a bright rose-pink geranium called Rose Diamond. This geranium proved faster to bloom from seed than any other I've grown, and the plants are most attractive with distinctly zoned leaves and large flower heads in a clear and vibrant shade of pink.

The individual florets on the flower heads displayed some fine dark rose striping against the clean pink of the petals, and a slight lightening to white at the centers of the individual flowers. Each of our plants bore four or five fully open flower heads at one time.

Another of the new flowers that we found quite charming was a pink verbena called Trinidad. Verbenas come in two basic styles — the spreading, creeping kinds and those with a compact, upright growth habit. Trinidad is an upright type, growing to about 10 inches tall with a spread of 12 inches.

Verbena foliage is a very bright green and rather feltlike to the touch, the leaves long and oval with deeply toothed edges. Above these decorative mounds of foliage our Trinidad plants produced masses of 2-inch wide, flat-topped flower clusters in a most refreshing shade of pink. Each individual floret in the cluster bore in delicate contrast a greenish-white eye.

Verbena is just a little slower to grow from seed than geraniums and gazanias. The seeds take up to 20 days to germinate and require quite warm soil temperatures at least during the day while they are germinating. But we found the plants to be strong, easy to manage and to transplant, and extremely free with their flowers. Virtually every leaf axil bore a flower stalk of lacy pink.

The 1985 All-America winning flowers also bring us yet another zinnia, this one a boon for home gardeners who are especially fond of bright, bold, golden yellow flowers in the garden.

Yellow Marvel is a very uniform zinnia with bright yellow, dahlialike flowers about 3 inches across borne well above the foliage. The plants grow to about 15 inches high and are ideal for use as a medium-high divider in the garden or simply for beds in combination with other annuals in complementary colors.

The last annual flower among the 1985 award winners is Century Mixed, a feathered or plumed type of celosia that grows to about 28 inches tall with 12-inch feathery plumes in a wide color range of yellows, scarlets and reds.

As I mentioned last week when I described the 1985 award-winning vegetables, we grew all the winners in our own garden in 1984 from trial seeds sent me by All-America Selections. Seeds of the current year's award winners usually aren't seen on local seed racks till the following year but they are available through most of the major seed catalogs.

McCall relates experiences to coaching

By Anita McSorley

Arlene McCall has experienced the joys of winning as well as the agony of defeat. She's an athlete in the most disciplined sense of the word, in her performance as a coach and teacher.

McCall coaches women's basketball and teaches physical education at Chaffey College. "My job is more than being a coach or a teacher," she says. "The kids have confidence in me. I can relate to them."

She feels she can help her students through her teaching but primariy through her personal experiences.

Chaffey closes its women's basketball season Feb. 15 at home against Riverside City College. It's not been a winning year for the Panthers, but that's not the all-important bottom line for McCall.

"Everyone likes to win, but I don't stress winning as the main goal. It's the talent you have at that time. That's all you can work with. All coaches like to win, but if you play hard, you're still a winner. You have to start somewhere."

In her four years in charge of the program, McCall's had a tough time starting. She says it's hard to build a team because of the location of the school and lack of recruits.

"There were only 27 high school seniors available to recruit from last fall," the 34-year-old Rialto resident pointed out. The more talented players opt for four-year colleges. That often results in less playing time than McCall offers.

She'll ask a potential recruit, "Which would you rather do: warm the bench at Cal Poly for two or three years or play basketball for two years at Chaffey?"

This year McCall had two returning players, yet that fact didn't deter her coaching.

"If I've been the best coach I could possibly be, then it (my time and effort) has not been in vain."

McCall's philosophy has developed through her own successes and defeats. "A person has to be able to laugh at themselves and laugh at life to survive." And a survivor she is.

She recently experienced a period of agony and near defeat in the form of a subdural hemotoma, hemorrhage of the dura mater of the brain.

"I wanted to give up because of the pain, but I guess it wasn't my turn to go," she says.

McCall lived with debilitating dizziness and massive headaches for months before a doctor at Kaiser Permanente Hospital in Fontana diagnosed the cause. Surgeries and a lengthy recuperative period followed, complicated with stomach and other problems which required further surgery.

"I couldn't have done what I've done without the support system I've had in my parents, brothers, sisters, teachers and friends," she said. "They've all been there for me when I needed them."

The outgoing McCall doesn't like the use of the word lucky when applied to her situation. "I use the word blessed. I've been blessed ..."

As in blessed with renewed health, although she's still recuperating, and her experiences at Chaffey.

"This season has taught me humility more than anything else. I tell the girls not to compare themselves with others. Don't play for me, for your mom or dad, play for yourself.

"I try to build character more than anything else, to stress the total person, the physical, mental and especially their education. No one can take that (education) away."

Despite a background of having competed in individual sports before securing the Chaffey job, McCall is totally into the team concept.

"I'm a people person. I like to be part of a team. I want us to strive for unity."

The unity theme came very much into play last year when she was successful in raising funds to take her basketball team to Hawaii. Together with the Associated Student Body, local merchants and the American Legion of Ontario, "we worked together as a school to go. It was a total commitment.

"I wanted the girls to have this experience. Some of them had never traveled further than San Bernardino before."

Before graduating from Cal State Los Angeles in 1972, McCall participated in five sports, excelling in track and field events and archery.

"My greatest athletic triumph was in archery. Coach Marge Callahan at Cal State took me from scratch and in six to eight weeks, worked me and molded me so that I qualified for the nationals in 1970," she said.

McCall also qualified for nationals in the discus and shot put while at Cal State, eventually earning a berth in the Olympic trials.

While working toward a bachelors degree in physical education, volleyball, basketball and hockey shared her time and interest. McCall earned a masters in special education at Washington State University.

Prior to her arrival on the Rancho Cucamonga campus in 1979, McCall worked at Compton College, East Los Angeles City College and Cal State Long Beach. "Chaffey has given me the most stability," she noted.

What does the future hold for McCall? She's using her "people" skills in working toward an eventual career in broadcast journalism as a sports announcer.

She has the courage and the desire to accomplish anything she sets out to do.

Gillespie member of winning swim team

Thanks in part to the efforts of 16-year-old Lisa Gillespie of Upland, a team of Southern Californians defeated Northern California in the annual North-South All-Star Dual Meet held recently at East Los Angeles College.

The South won 990-860 to earn its fifth straight victory in the series.

A member of the Industry Hills Aquatics club, Gillespie competed for the southern squad in the 15-16 girls' division. She won both the 200-yard freestyle (1:48.35) and the 500-yard free (4:50.02).

In addition, the Upland High School student was second in the 400-yard freestyle relay.

In the 17-18 girls' division, Cathy Florkowski of Montclair was fifth in the 200-yard butterfly while Leah Otto of Upland was sixth in the same event.

Other outstanding Industry Hills performers who aided the South's cause were Claremont's Jill Teeples, who had a first, a second and a third in the 11-12 girls' division, and Olympic gold medalist Jenna Johnson, who was first in three events. Johnson set a meet record in the 50 freestyle (23.34).

Gillespie, Otto and Florkowski were among 17 Industry Hills swimmers who qualified for the Southern California all-star team with strong performances at the qualifying meet at East L.A. College.

Gillespie was the leading qualifier in the 15-16 girls' division, qualifying in nine events and winning four events at the four-day qualifying meet.

Gillespie's wins came in the 200-yard freestyle (1:49.14), the 500-yard freestyle (4:44.55), 400 Individual Medley (4:24.14) and 200-yard butterfly (2:06.06).

She was also second in three events: the 1,000-yard freestyle (9:49.48), 100-yard freestyle (51.45) and 100 butterfly (57.76), and third in two others: the 50-yard freestyle (24.23) and the 200 individual medley (2:10.86).

In addition, Gillespie made national time standards in five events at the Q meet.

In the 17-18 girls' division, Otto was third in the 200-yard butterfly (2:10.15) and 10th in the 500-yard freestyle (5:15.64).

Florkowski was second in the 200-yard butterfly (2:10.05), fourth in the 400-yard individual medley (4:48.45), sixth in the 200-yard individual Medley (2:10.05) and 10th in the 500-yard freestyle (5:10.89).
